"Lemonade," by Andrew Neil is a song with a strong message: despite the hardships of life, no matter what setbacks you encounter, if life gives you lemons you make lemonade!

Andrew has had his share of setbacks, but with an unbreakable spirit he struggles on. Most likely this song is pretty much about his fighting spirit and undying optimism.

The arrangement is bare naked! Andrew's voice is frail and vulnerable, delivering the song's message straight to our hearts.

The sound of the guitar is harsh and aggressive. Andrew really hits the guitar in a very rhythmic fashion that bares the song, reminding me of Nirvana.

The only other instrument is a haunting sound, could be a synth, but it is also reminiscent of a flute. It makes the choruses stand out even more.

The song is full of great lyrics. Andrew has a way with words, the phrase, is an absolute favorite of mine.

“Even in Hell, be thankful for shade”

Lemonade is a great song that tells a remarkable story of life's struggles, of getting up, pressing on and being positive.

Stay on the Sunny Side.
