

Gareth Rhys - " Don't Walk Away From Me"

Mary Wood Founder - @BreconIReviews and Brecon Indie Review Team

I ran into Gareth's Music rather by chance, late one night, you-tubing.
I fell head over ears in love with his music.

Flashbacks to David Gates, (lead vocalist of Bread), rolled up with some 70s blue eyed soul and some early Beatles. Pretty solid company, yet Gareth Rhys makes and delivers his own distinct music.

The songwriting is creative, relatable and marketable within the supreme delivery.

The music is great; I am tagging it mid to late 60s and some 70s. Quite notable are the creative and well-skilled manner the music changes along the way, while hanging onto a core style.

There is great attention to detail and the subtle sound nuances fit in beautifully and add depth to the other elements of the song.

Gareth has the voice for which I await; the lived-it sound and nice register that is not too perfect, exactly right to connect with listeners.

Gareth has a Blue-Eyed Soul way of hooking listeners, combining the music and his voice creates the emotion that hurts so good!

He really sings choruses so well; they are guaranteed gut hitters.

“I need you around...I need you around me now”

Smooth and impacting, dude!
