

Blyss! - "Fall"

Review by: Mad Wet Sea, Norse Gods

Brecon Indie Reviewer Team

How many times must you come?
To the rise, and the fall?

Here in Hléysey, my brothers and I, Ægir, have been blasting the new driving acoustic rock song Fall, by the band Blyss, through our halls.

Fall is reminiscent of REM in sound, with a tinge of Tonic as well.

Blyss is a band made up of William Mooney (guitar, vocals), Steven Whitcomb (Bass) and Rachel Bellinsky (drums and vocals).

Life is full of ups and downs, rising and falling, with vindication sometimes not achieved. William sings with the conviction of someone who knows this path well.

The band is tight, and the guitars jangly, and release themselves upon the solo break.

A great follow up from the release of previous single, " Fruitless Child." (acoustic)

These mighty souls would be welcome in our halls!

Make sure to follow them on social media and pick up their music on Bandcamp at

<https://t.co/qVX545eI0Q>