

Young Rell – You Don't Have To Go

Reviewed by Bryan Robinson

Brecon Indie Review Team

"You don't have to go"

Well, when Young Rell is singing this, you shouldn't go, at least until you've played it repeatedly and inhaled the sweet, melancholic vibes coming from his bell-like sounding guitar and amp.

The vocals are pure, clean and evocative. Who would want to go if Young Rell is singing as sweetly as that?

The guitar chugs along like a steam train, punctuated by beautiful blues kicks that make you sit back and hear this story. Sparse arrangement means nothing gets in the way of the message, and clarity of the guitar playing, which is dynamic and cleverly phrased, like a distant lonely voice that pulls at your heart strings.

Kick back and listen to this sweet take, beautifully told by the talented Young Rell.

I still can't believe that he's only 14 years old!