

Symphony Of Broken Hearts – Wild Horse

Review by Mad Wet Sea

"I saw your photograph, the saddest part about it is that I couldn't cry, cause I noticed you're looking happier."

Love is like the sea. It has its up's, and its downs, with sudden riptides to pull you under.

Wild Horse are a group of East Sussex lads infusing pop and soul to create a unique sound not far from the shores of early Coldplay, Thriving Ivory, or The Format.

Writer, Jack Baldwin pours his heart out in this ballad dealing with a breakup and resentment that comes from looking back and picking the pieces up.

The haunting vocals and driving drums lead this song.

The highlight of their day is sitting with friends, as later, they lie alone feeling sorry for themselves.

People weren't lying, everything ended. Truly tugging at heartstrings.

These brothers, blood or not, wrote a beautiful song. You can find them being featured on the BBC (British Broadcasting Company), and all streaming platforms.

Enrich your life by sharing in this heartbreak!
