

Andrew Neil - Lying To Myself (feat Tiezzi)

Review : Jack Baldwin (Wild Horse)

Brecon Indie Review Team

Lying To Myself, by Andrew Neil ft Tiezzi, is such an awesome tune with a very catchy chorus.

I love the mix of acoustic and electric guitars. The song has a unique feel to it, like a mixture of blues and 90s grunge, a brilliant sound.

The group vocals on the chorus reminds me of some classic Kiss record and I love the way the drums drive the song giving it a steady, danceable beat.

This is another top tier tune from Andrew who writes creative and interesting lyrics. You could imagine this song being played in a smokey bar during the 70's, a downtown New York vibe!

His standout voice has an extremely distinct subtlety about it. It takes you straight back to old school extraordinary sounds.

Andrew's songwriting is also very accomplished and intelligent, with brilliant lyrics and chord structures being used in all of his songs.

Lying To Myself is probably my favorite Andrew Neil song yet.

The groove is just irresistible and demands that you dance!